

Courses for working with infectious substances and GMM

For those who don't have the experience or are not acquainted with the Swedish laws and regulations governing work with infectious substances or GMM, there is a one day course "Working with Biorisks: Infectious Substances and Genetically Modified Microorganisms", held several times each semester. During this course we will discuss the organization of Uppsala University, Swedish laws and ordinances, work with infectious substances, incidents and accidents, practical risk assessments, containment and clean-up of a simulated biological spill, and how to handle sharps.

The course is free of charge (and in some cases mandatory) for those who work at Uppsala University, and is primarily aimed at bachelor/master students, Ph.D. students, post-docs, laboratory assistants, and new group leaders. The course is held in English, and comes with complementary "fika" and lunch. For Uppsala University Ph.D. students the course is generally worth 1 credit, ask your course administrator. The course is not aimed at undergraduate students as it does not yield credits "högskolepoäng".
